Parker was suffering from appendicitis, but when the operation was performed it was discovered that he had an abiness during his entire life, and began his career in Fishdule, Mass, where he and his father, James F. Parker, ran a livery stable and also a small ho-tel. As his father was interested in House which was a more pretentious hotel. In 1890 Mr. Parker's father died, and in the same year he left Southbridge and came to Norwich, where he assumed the managership of the Hotel Wauregan which was at that time in hard straits and here he first demno-strated his peculiar ability as a man-ager of hotels which were not paying well and of building them up to a pay-well and of building them up to a paying basis.

While in Norwich he established the Parker-Davenport Co., which was dissolved five years ago. Mr. Parker continued as manager of Wauregan House until 1897, when he went to New London as the manager of the Crocker House, which was then in very much House, which was then in very much the same condition that the Waurean had been when he assumed charge of it. The presperity of the Crocker House during the period that followed was due wholly to the executive ability of Mr. Parker, who continued as manager of the Cfocker House until April, 1920, when he retired from business. Since that time he had been residing at the Hotel Mohican in New London and had apparently been in the best of health until shortly before his death.
